

Literature Review In Qualitative Research

Literature Review In Qualitative Research - The Literature review is part of the process as you have to explain in your dissertation where you acquired the information from and to state where the gaps are missing in the literature to balance out your research. Interviews may be part of your approach, but you have to review grounded research on your topic. Evaluating Quality Standards in a Qualitative Research Literature Review. When conducting a literature review for a TQF proposal, it is worthwhile for the researcher to use a reference table or matrix that helps to evaluate each relevant study according to the steps that were taken to maximize Credibility (e.g., representativeness of the sample,...is a form of systematic review or integration of qualitative research findings in a target domain that are themselves interpretive syntheses of data, including phenomenologies, ethnographies, grounded theories, and other integrated and coherent descriptions or explanations of phenomena, events, or cases. It is a well-known form of qualitative research literature review that focuses on the culture of a group of people. Some appropriate data gathering and analysis methods include participant observation and unstructured interviews.